

IMPORTANT NOTES

In order to tell what effect is being generated by the EDL always use a single percussive or tapping sound as opposed to a sustained or ringing note. A long tone tends to mask the effects.

Do not be afraid to experiment with the EDL. You can not damage the unit or the amplifier by experimenting with the controls.

Caution must be observed when plugging unit into a power source. A 120 Volt unit plugged into a 240 Volt source will cause instant and serious damage when turned on. A 240 Volt unit plugged into a 120 Volt source will not damage the unit but it will not operate.

It may take a few minutes before the EDL reaches normal operating (room) temperature if the unit has been transported in the trunk of a car in winter. No damage will take place but the knob settings may have to be readjusted from cold to normal operation.

Try to provide a level, ventilated location for the EDL to be operated from, for maximum performance and longevity.
